SNBT Expert Teaches Peers at National Financial Institute

Cannon Financial Institute recently selected Mike Kolasa, Vice President & Trust Officer at The Stephenson National Bank & Trust (SNBT), to serve as an instructor for their prestigious professional education program. During the week-long program at The University of Notre Dame, Mike taught the Trust II Course for approximately 30 professionals from around the country.

“Mike was selected because of his successful track record and the kind of work he does at The Stephenson National Bank & Trust – he is not only in the field with clients on a daily basis, but he also knows the technical details and remains at the forefront of trends, changes, and best practices shaping the financial services industry,” said Greg Salmen, SNBT Senior Vice President & Trust Manager.

This prestigious school uses a mix of lectures from industry experts so that professionals gain skills, technical knowledge and the most up-to-date information pertaining to this ever-changing and complex banking environment.

“Mike is just one of the high-caliber members of our bank team that have earned a reputation for delivering comprehensive solutions that are focused, relevant, and strategically invaluable,” said Salmen. “We have the region’s most qualified team of industry leaders including 15 professionals who hold a cumulative 27 advanced credentials in financial planning.”

Founded in 1961, Cannon Financial Institute is the premier provider of professional development solutions for the world’s top financial organizations. Clients of Cannon consistently –and immediately – see dramatic results and improved productivity from students who have experienced our professional development solutions. Cannon’s strength and reputation rest in our ability to create high-impact professional development solutions delivered by individuals who have specific knowledge, experience, and demonstrated success in their respective area of expertise. www.cannonfinancial.com
